

The interplay between poverty reduction, inequality, and economic development in Nigeria is complex and multi-faceted. Analyzing the results from the empirical models sheds light on the dynamics at play and provides insights into effective policy measures. This analysis focuses on three main areas: the impact of economic growth on poverty, the relationship between inequality and poverty, and the broader implications for sustainable development.